

Alumni Portal

Keep alumni active, engaged and connected so they stay invested

"increasing the number of alumni who engage" is a top goal for next year

Engaged alumni are invested alumni

It's no secret that higher ed institutions rely on the engagement (and monetary contributions) of their alumni. They're your top evangelizers and major supporters. But capturing alumni attention is increasingly difficult. Phone calls and emails are way too easy to ignore (just ask your alumni relations team).

It's time to give alumni a better way to engage.

Pull everything alumni care about into a single app so they can easily stay up-to-date and connected. Keeping up with institution happenings, participating in Groups with fellow alum and chatting with old professors make the platform interesting and worthwhile. While they're there, you can surface important tasks ... like donating to the latest fundraising drive or sharing an open internship.

Getting in front of alumni is challenging. Offering a portal with features they actually want to use trumps traditional outreach methods everyday of the week.

Break through the noise

20%

of institutions say the biggest roadblock to alumni engagement is too much competition for their attention

Only 23%

of institutions have a dedicated mobile app for their alumni

7.4

How alumni use the Path portal

Keeping up with campus life

Even though they're not in school anymore, making it easy for alumni to keep up with campus events (like homecoming), news (like sports scores) and favorite professors (via direct messaging) helps them feel connected to their alma mater and stay invested.

Connecting with peers

Path Groups lets alumni create networking connections based on their current interests, like career, degree, location and more.

Actually seeing tasks

Phone calls and emails are easy to ignore. Make sure important campaigns get in front of alumni with in-portal announcements, alerts, push notifications and Tasks that need to be completed.

Helping current students

Alumni are one of the most valuable — but underutilized — resources for current students. Connect your alumni to your current students with the same portal. Alumni can offer advice and help via Groups, messaging, virtual events and more.
